Feedback and contributions of the campaign:
The campaign has been successful in engaging women from the government to better respond to their needs. Women have shared their opinions and experiences, which have been translated into action. The campaign has raised awareness about decent work and how the minimum wage can improve women's lives. It has shown that women can be leaders and organize to help others.

Expected results:
The campaign makes tangible strides towards achieving its goals. Women's confidence to seek better opportunities, including the right to organize, is growing. The campaign is enhancing young women's lives, improving their health, and building collectives and strategies to ensure that younger and older women can work together.

Objectives:
The campaign seeks to stimulate meaningful discussion and in turn influence existing policies towards decent work. The primary objective of the campaign is to raise awareness of decent work and decent work culture in Zambia.

Decents for Life: Women's lives improve when they build collectives and strategies to ensure that younger and older women can work together. The campaign seeks to stimulate meaningful discussion and in turn influence existing policies towards decent work. The primary objective of the campaign is to raise awareness of decent work and decent work culture in Zambia.

Why DFL?
Women's lives improve when they build collectives and strategies to ensure that younger and older women can work together. The campaign seeks to stimulate meaningful discussion and in turn influence existing policies towards decent work. The primary objective of the campaign is to raise awareness of decent work and decent work culture in Zambia.

About DFL:
The campaign is about empowering young women. It provides women with the confidence to seek better opportunities, including the right to organize and help others. The campaign encourages many of them to apply for and get training, and into leadership positions, to stand up for themselves at work and in the home.